How Area Residents Describe UFOs!

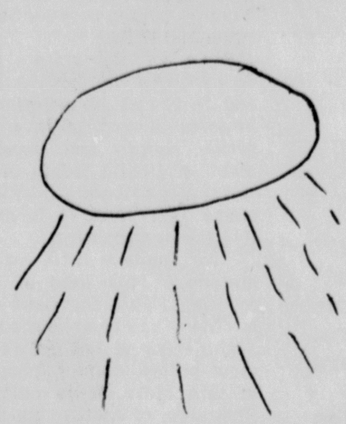
"I was scared." That's the way Penny Mow described her feelings when she was accompanied down the road toward her home by an Unidentified Flying Object (UFO) Tuesday night.

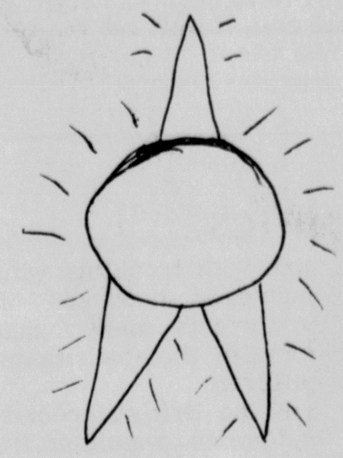
"Scared" was also the way two women reacted when they also were followed along a road near the Rosebud area last week.

Both sightings were seen by more than one person, which sort of negates an impulse among listeners to laugh at the whole thing.

Penny, who works at Keith's Minimax after school, which she attends in Rockdale, lives on the Salem road and is usually accompanied home by her boy friend, who once expressed a desire to see a UFO. Penny didn't care to see one, and on the one night when she went home alone, a bright light "coming from some round object" traveled at the side of her car.

The light changed to burnt orange, Penny said, and speeded up when she did, and slowed when she slowed. She said the glare lit up the whole car. It traveled at the side until she turned off on a gravel road, then rose up above the car and appeared on the other side.





Penny said the light hovered over a stock tank near her home as she drove up to the house. There were no lights at the house so Penny turned around and drove to her grandmother's place, with the object following along at the side of her car.

She said Mrs. Mary Angell, her three daughters and her grandmother all saw the object in a pasture near the house and watched as it turned a deep red color and faded away.

"It chased us, and we were scared, and our boys were scared," so said Mrs. Fay Seeley and Mrs. Fay Hileman Sunday night when they saw a UFO on FM 413 between Kendrick Ranch entrance and the Brazos River.

An account of that sighting appeared in the Rosebud News, and was accompanied by a sketch of the object, which was round with three points, two at the bottom and one at the top.

Mrs. Seeley, her sons Richard, 13 and Russell, 8, Mrs. Hileman and her son Richard, 7, were returning to Rosebud from a deer hunt near Buffalo.

When they turned from State Highway 6 to Highway 14 they noticed an object brightening and then dimming, and it seemed to follow their car, first on one side and then the other. They turned the car around and sped along Highway 6, with the object still following. When they got behind another car, the object seemed to just disappear, Mrs. Seeley said.

Other sightings of mysterious bright lights have been reported by other people in the Rosebud area, including a bright light near a home in Powers Chapel, and a brightness near a home in Pleasant Grove community. Seen a couple of times was a bright light that crossed the sky.

A motorist told Marlin Police recently about an object following his car along State 6 from the Reagan to the Marlin route.

Anyway, the Central Texas area seems to be joining other places in the United States that are reporting UFOs seen.

School Tax Survey Planned

BELTON

The Belton school board voted in a special session to pay $61,750 for a complete tax re-evaluation and equalization program for the Belton ISD. The low proposal from Southwest Appraisal Co. of Austin was accepted. Existing maps and file cards will be updated as the survey progresses, and all property will be measured during the survey. Personal property is not to be included in the equalization study.

UF Drive Over The Top

ROCKDALE

South Milam County's United Fund campaign total slid into home base last Thursday with $20,538 in the till -- $165 over the 1973 drive goal and with two or three hundred more dollars expected. "Thanks to six weeks of diligent work by more than 100 volunteer workers," drive chairman Hal Reagan said, "the 1973 drive is a major success and all 11 United Fund agencies will be paid in full."

State School Won't Close

GATESVILLE

The Texas Youth Council has abandoned a plan to close the Gatesville State School for Boys. That assurance was received by the Chamber of Commerce industrial team, Charles Wise chairman. Student population has dwindled shaprly, however, the last few months at the Gatesville State Schools and Mountain View. Wise said losing the state schools would be a "staggering blow" to Gatesville. "We are interested in making it the best institution possible and we want to be a part of it."

Window Question Answered

GEORGETOWN

Will the new high school be practical without windows? The question has troubled many in the school district and had been repeatedly asked of the school trustees. Monday night they got the answer from the architect. The architect said all they had to do is throw a breaker on the compressors to operate fans that bring in fresh air and circulate it through the ducts in the classrooms. This would be strictly a ventilating process and not cooled air, he explained.

Deer Hunters Have Opening Day

McGREGOR

Local deer hunters didn't have to worry about freezing temperatures because of cold weather during the first weekend of the season. A lot of good bucks were shot in spite of the weather. An overcast day over most of the area. Saturday probably helped bring the deer out, plus the fact that the rut was on in many parts of the state. Early reports indicate that the deer are in pretty good condition.

Park Due 5,000 Acres

SOMERVILLE

Negotiations are underway between the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and the U. S. Corps of Engineers for an additional 5,000 acres to be included in Lake Somerville State Park. Located midway between Austin and Houston, the additional acreage is to be used in part for 23.9 miles of hiking, bicycling and equestrian trails. P&W Commissioners approved a design and development budget of $77,275 in a recent meeting.

COUNCIL GRANTS 10% INCREASE TO LIGHT COMPANY

The city council granted a 10 per cent rate increase to Texas Power and Light Co. Tuesday evening at a regular meeting. Henry Siebman, TP&L district manager, appeared before the council and read a statement from the utility company explaining the need for the adjustment.

He said the increase was essential to help insure an adequate supply of electric power and would cost the average residential customer about seven cents more per day. It will become effective on March, 1974. electric bills.

The rate hike is only the third in TP&L's 61-year history. In 1972, the company was granted a six per cent general increase, its first in more than 21 years.

Mayor Gene Glake noted that the utility company has always been "very helpful in the community," and "contributes a great deal toward the betterment of Cameron."

The rate increase was granted by a unanimous vote of the council.

For the first time in the tenure of Mayor Blake, he was called on to vote on a proposition which had a tied vote by councilmen. The proposition was to vote $150 a month of revenue sharing funds to the Cameron Day Care Center.

Mayor Blake explained that he had world from state officials that the money would be a legitimate expenditure, and recommended that the council approve the funds.

Councilman Bob Clark said he wanted more information on the center before voting funds for it and Mayor Blake told him he could get the information himself, since the mayor was sold on the proposition. During discussion before the vote, Councilman Lincoln Mondrik also said more information should be obtained before voting funds.

When it came to a vote on a motion by Lawrence Zotz, and seconded by Councilman Lester Turner, both Clark and Mondrik voted no. The mayor broke the tie by voting yes along with Zotz and Turner.

In other business, bids were awarded to Duncum Implement Co. for two riding lawnmowers to care for parks and cemetery, and authorized the city secretary to advertise for bids on a new police car to replace an old one.

Council also received reassurance from crop dusting company that empty poison containers at the air park would be disposed of and the premises kept clean.

No Christmas Parade

There will be no Christmas parade in Cameron this year, it was announced by the Chamber of Commerce. Uncertain weather, plus the condition of downtown streets are not considered conducive to a successful parade this year, the Chamber said.

Kidnap Car Found In Somerville After Milano Residents Freed

Investigation into the kidnapping of a Milano man, his son and a girl quickened after the car used in the kidnapping was found abandoned in Somerville Thursday.

The car belongs to Luther Walker, who, along with his son and the son's girlfriend, were threatened with death by a man with a pistol Wednesday night, with a long automobile ride during which the men were locked in the trunk.

According to Sheriff Carl Black, events started Wednesday night when Walker, who owns a store and filling station at Milano, closed the store and went to his pickup parked near the store. When he got to the truck, he found the armed man who asked for money. Walker gave him what was in his pockets and also his watch.

The man told Walker to get in the truck, and got in on the other side, moving two rifles that were in the seat. Walker was so excited he was unable to start the truck, and the man threatened to kill him.

Mrs. Walker, becoming anxious when Walker failed to come home, sent his son, James David Walker, along with his girl friend to the store. When they drove up in Mrs. Walker's car, the man got out of the pickup and held the gun on both of them. He told all of them to get in the car, and told the girl to drive. She drove at his direction three miles toward Gause, while the man asked for more money.

Walker told him the other money was in a box in the pickup so the man told the girl to stop the car, and at gunpoint, forced Walker and his son into the trunk of the car, which he locked.

He had the girl drive back to the store and got the box, then had her drive out to Lin Luce Ranch, some ten miles from Milano.

He had all three line up and told them he was going to kill them, that he'd killed some other people in Mississippi and "had nothing to lose." The three told the sheriff they fully expected to be shot in the road.

However, the man threw a flashlight at their feet, got in the car, and drove off. The three walked to the nearest house and called for help.

Sheriff Black said no arrest had been made, but law enforcement officers were looking for two men who were seen in the Walker car in Somerville before it was abandoned.

Gas Rationing Seen As One Answer To America's Fuel Crisis

By Robert Kearns

WASHINGTON

Reuter -- America's gasoline gauge is dipping toward empty and rationing coupons may have to be issued to hold it steady.

That dismal prospect leaped into headlines across the country this week with the beleaguered Nixon administration finally conceding after months of heated arguments that printing fuel coupons may be the only way to spread the nation's fuel shortage around.

Despite the last minute optimism of President Nixon that rationing might still be avoided, many in the administration and congressional leaders, appear to agree that some form of rationing will go into effect as early as January.

It was 31 years ago last May that German submarines and wartime shortages forced U.S. citizens to change their motoring ways.

Now, without a war and with half its 210 million population licensed to drive cars, the administration faces a far more complicated problem in getting the nation to accept the realities of a fuel shortage brought on by the Arab oil boycott, refinery shortages and the fierce worldwide scramble by industrialized countries to latch onto dwindling supplies.

Sheer numbers will make rationing a bureaucratic nightmare.

Americans, the advertisements used to point out, have long had a love affair with the automobile. And only recently have Detroit carmakers reluctantly started to abandon the race to make cars bigger and faster every model year.

It is estimated that a staggering 95 million cars -- nearly one for every two people in the country -- clog American roads.

On average, a car owner will drive some 10,000 miles every year and tests in major metropolitan areas show that more than half the time, he is the car's sole passenger.

The so-called "average" driver needs about 750 gallons of gasoline a year to go the "average" distance, or at least 14 gallons every week.

Using Nixon's own estimate, considered to be conservative by a number of industry officials, the U. S. gasoline shortage in the coming monthis could reach 29.4 million gallons a day.

Simple arithmetic argues that the administration must get drivers to forego driving at least two gallons worth each week-or about 20 miles less.

In World War II, when the total car population was just over 27 million , the government issued windshield stickers in various grades which allowed the lowest priority driver to travel about 45 miles a week on an allotment of three gallons.

Car owners who qualified as more important personnel -- defence workers, policemen, doctors, farmers and others who made up about half the total -- were given special stickers to buy as much gas as they needed.

Current estimates are that a rationing program would have to fix a 10 to 15 gallon per car weekly limit to make up for a minimum shortage expected to total 10 per cent.

To the owner of a small imported Volkswagen or Toyota, 10 gallons will more than likely take him everywhere he wants to go -- but the wealthy driver of a three - ton, air-conditioned, power - loaded $10,000 Lincoln Continental would be lucky to get to his office and back two days in a row on the same amount of gasoline.

The implications of a coupon scheme are many and the expected cries from stranded motorists have made top administration energy planners squeamish about such a move.

Accord And Polemics...

Northern Ireland may realize a new political system out of the chaos of civil war.

Roman Catholic minority is given a key role in government and ultimate prospect of uniting Ireland in an accord with Britain.

One is reminded of the polemic read by actor Richard Harris about the travesty of irreligion in the killing of children on the streets of Belfast. He points out his fiery poem was banned by BBC (British Broadcasting Company), but played 24 hours a day for seven days by Radio Luxemborg. It is a reading of anguish by a Northern Irishman who speaks Shakespearian English and evidences talent as a poet.

This civil war has been going on more than 50 years. In recent years it took a nasty turn with bombings which slaughtered hundreds of noncombatants, many youngsters. Some of the combatants were children.

If the British accord holds and builds to a united Ireland, it will be the end to 50 years of war that makes absolutely no sense in the latter 20th Century.

There was a Hundred Years War which actually went on about 120 years, but was the same: protestant against catholic. That was 300 years ago and more understandable, if beyond reason.

In a day when Skylab is orbiting and a joint USSR-USA space station is planned for 1975, Richard Harris' polemics against the killing of children in the streets should have been heard in Britain.

Its Own Conclusions...

Confucius founded a Chinese order which became Confucisism, a religion based on homiles, and wisdom not unlike those out of "Poor Richard's Almanac", early publication of Ben Franklin.

Confucius was adequate for about 2,000 years, but who is under criticism by the Red China press, which is anything but free.

Confucius' wisdom is being termed unprogressive and apparently found unreliable in the new order of things.

The attack is political. Chairman Mao's "Thoughts" may well be the point of contention. This primer on oriental communist dogma is everywhere and still runs into Confucian wisdom wherever a mind is over 35 or 40. The Red Chinese regime took over in 1950.

Thought control is apparently what Chinese leaders seek within their country. But it won't work when China and the U. S. are entering detente for the first time in 2,000 years.

Even the oriental mind comes to its own conclusions.

Group Seeks To Improve Enforcement

By Bill Boykin

A new group is seeking to improve cooperation between state and federal law enforcement officials in Texas.

Atty. Gen. John L. Hill and U. S. Attorney William S. Sessions of San Antonio are co-chairman of the "Federal - State Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee."

The organization is described as an outgrowth of discussion over a several months' period between Sessions and Hill.

Some of the state's top prosecutors of both state and federal jurisdictions, Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and Department of Public Safety officials met privately in Hill's office last week to formalize the organization.

"We made a little bit of history," Hill said of the meeting. "It's the first time there has ever been such a gathering of law enforcement-policy making people in this state. It is only a first step, of course, but the lines of communication are open, and we will have a lot to gain, if we exert the effort to make it work."

Hill and Sessions expressed optimism about prospects for success. They said state and federal law enforcement officials have a strong mutual desire to work more closely together and deal more openly with each other.

The two attorneys predicted state and federal law enforcement officials, and the public, will gain from better coordination of policies, operational efforts and intelligence resources.

They indicated the committee will meet three or four times a year to discuss problems and topics of mutual interest.

FUEL CRISIS

Texas farmers have been having serious problems getting necessary diesel fuel to harvest cotton, pick citrus and combine grain sorghum due to "mass confusion" over federal fuel allocation regulations.

After several reversals by federal officials, some dealers were still slow to make sales because they feared prosecution if they acted under informal agreements passed along to them. Agriculture Commissioner John White joined Gov. Dolph Briscoe in demanding "immediate positive action" at the federal level.

Rep. John Newton of Beeville announced at a national energy crisis meeting in Baoton a stop federal Department of Interior official had assured him the probelm will be worked out in 10 days to two weeks (from last weekend).

Newton said he was informed that users will be able to draw their allocations when they need the fuel rather than on a month-by-month basis.

The hitch has been that allocations were based on the amount of fuel used in November, 1972 -- a low usage month for Texas.

ECONOMIES SOUGHT

The State Welfare Board last week discussed a proposal to screen hospital admissions of Texans under the Medicaid program in an effort to eliminate needless medical outlays.

Texas Medical Foundation proposed a review to determine whether patients can receive equal, but less expensive, care in other institutions. The admission review would be undertaken within 24 hours after a patient enters a hospital under Medicaid. Periodic reviews would follow to determine how long the patient needs to remain in the hospital.

Under federal regulations the state will be required to implement some kind of utilization review program.

Texas Medical Foundation estimated the program could be initiated within 60 to 90 days following a 30-day training period for personnel.

AG OPINIONS

Texas Animal Health Commission may require slaughter of brucellosis-infected cattle within 15 days of determination of infection, Attorney General Hill informed the agency.

In other recent opinions, Hill concluded:

*Whether -- and how long -- a Brooks County road foreman can keep his job after his brother-in-law became county commissioner depends on terms of his hiring agreement.

* The county clerk of Harris County is not required to record a certified copy of a limited partnership agreement recorded in the secretary of state's office in another state.

* Because Paris has held no local option liquor election for a year, no deposit of money should have been required of individuals petitioning for a vote on legalizing sale of alcoholic beverages for off-premises consumption. The amount should be refunded.

* Texas Cosmetology Commission is not authorized to adopt rules and regulations applying particularly to manicurists nor to waive any requirements of beauty shops in general for a shop limiting its practice to manicuring or any other specific field.

* The House of Representatives can use appropriated state funds to buy $2 certificates of service for each member.

* Percentage of occupancy of nursing homes is confidential, and need not be disclosed under the open records law.

* Parks and Wildlife Department regulations may be promulgated and enforced for St. Charles Bay where the Secretary of Interior has not asserted jurisdiction.

* PWD may not adopt regulations for enforcing hunter safety on private tracts of land.

* Maximum salary of a Nueces County court at law judge is $20,000 a year.

* The Texas State Historical Survey Committee can use a projessional fees and services allocation to pay salaries.

HEARING SET

The Railroad Commission has set a hearing November 26 to determine possible need for a mandatory statewide gas apportionment program.

The hearing will first explore whether the available supply of natural gas can be voluntarily shared or apportioned on an equitable basis among gas utilities to alleviate threatening shortages.

The Commission said it feels it has the statutory responsibility to protect the public interest on a statewide basis and proposes to issue rules and orders to prevent or lessen impact of gas shortages.

Exiled Palestinians Hope For Middle East Agreement

By Fred Bridgland

BEIRUT

Reuter -- The possibility that the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) might attend a Middle East peace conference has again brought into sharp focus the plight of the Palestinians, the most enduring of the causes of four bloody and costly wars between the Arabs and Jews.

Since 1948 when Britain withdrew and ended its mandate, about 1,500,000 Moslems and Christian Arabs whose roots were in Palestine have gone into exile.

The land they once knew is, in their eyes, a territory seized and occupied by a Zionist state now heavily populated by foreign immigrants.

The Palestinians are bitter, believing their plight has been ignored and their longing to return to their homeland ruthlessly exploited in the great power game of world politics.

Like the Jews, who suffered in the diaspora for18 centuries, the Palestinians dream of a return to their own "promised land."

"I still remember the beauty and greenness of Palestine," was the nostalgic comment of a middle-aged carpenter in a Palestinian refugee camp in Jordan.

"That is my home," he told a correspondent recently. "It is paradise. Why else would Christ and other prophets have chosen to come to that land if it was not paradise?"

By United Nations calculations, 726,000 Palestinians fled from their homes and land during the first Arab-Israeli conflict after the birth of Israel in 1948 and were unable -- or unwilling to return.

That was an estimate made in December, 1949, and the refugee ranks have swelled since then through the natural rise in the Palestinian refugee population.

For Palestinians and their leaders the memory of Count Folke Bernadott'e declaration on September 16, 1948, remains as vivid today as it was a quarter of a century ago.

The Swedish United Nations mediator in Palestine fell to assassins bullets of the Jewish Stern gang the day after he stated: "The rights of innocent people, uprooted from their homes by the present terror and ravages of war, to return to their homes should be affirmed and made effective."

Hundreds of thousands of Palestine refugees in the years since 1950 have had to subsist on the assistance provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA).

Financed by voluntary contributions from governments, private organizations and individuals UNRWA still supplies regular food rations to 829,000 Palestinian refugees who exist in ramshackle camps in Jordan, Lebanon, Syria and other areas.

Refugees who possess academic, trade or technical skills have been able to make their own way outside the camps without dependence on international charity. Most of them were urbanized Arabs and the major sufferers have been the refugees without skills.

The refugee camp populations are the hard core of human despair. From them have emerged the bitterest Palestinians and some of the most politically active. And the misery of the camps has been the wellspring of the guerrilla movements that have shocked the world with hijackings, kidnapings and murders in the last five years.

While most of the world regarded the Palestine guerrilla attack on Israel's Olympic athletes at Munich last year with horror, even conservative and moderate Arab opinion which frown on such tactics turned their criticisms on those people and nations, who, they assert, had steadfastly ignored and disregarded the desperation of the Palestinians.

Pierre Gemayel, leader of Lebanon's rightwing Phulangist Party, who expressed regret for the Munich attack, added: "What can we expect from people who have been unjustly stripped of their citizenship and their land and have been drived from the land of their fathers and forland of their fathers and forefathers?"

HELIOS

Helium, the gas that's used in lighter-than-aircraft, was first identified in the sun before its presence was known on earth. Hence the name Helium comes from the Greek word Helios, meaning sun.

Vietnam Cease Fire Fragile

SAIGON

Reuter -- The Vietnam ceasefire, which won peace prizes for its American and communist architects and brought worldwide relief when it was signed in January, is looking increasingly fragile amid new rumblings of war.

Since American Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and North Vietnamese politburo member Le Duc Tho won th for arranging the ceasefire, about 1,000 soldiers and civilians have been killed in continued fighting.

On Nov. 5, for example, North Vietnamese troops overran a government outpost-the second in 24 hours -- near the Cambodian border in what appeared to be the most important battle since the ceasefire agreement.

Although bigger than most, the battle was typical of a situation in which both sides say the ceasefire is broken almost daily.

Le Duc Tho for example, has gone so far as to reject the peace prize, saying he will only consider accepting it when peace is really restored in South Vietnam.

And South Vietnam's President Thieu has gone so far as to predict that a full scale war may again be imminent.

From the start the cease fire has been shaky. The political talks which had been designed to lead to peaceful cooperation between the Viet Cong and South Vietnam have never materialized.

In fact, each successive month since January has seen an increase in fighting. It has now reached a point where some officials no longer talk of whether there will be a new communist offensive but of when it will happen.

In his first national day address since the ceasefire, President Thieu painted a particularly gloomy picture and warned that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong could start a new war by the beginning of the year.

Later, in Paris, the Viet Cong counter-charged that President Thieu had imported more than half a million tons of American arms and ammunition since the peace pact was signed.

According to President Thieu, there is overwhelming evidence of a planned new offensive by the communists.

Fighting between government and communist troops now regularly takes place at the battalion size level indicating that the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese are moving in larger size units.

South Vietnamese reconnaissance flights and commandos have reported day and night work to build roads and a transportation network in communist controlled areas.

Some American analysts say that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong are now at their strongest militarily since the Vietnam war began.

It is this aspect of a new offensive that is most worrying to the South Vietnamese government.

Proposed New Constitution Copies Now Available

Senator Bill Patman of Ganado says he has copies of the proposed new Constitution for Texas available. Just send your name and address to either P. O. Drawer A, Ganado 77962 or P. O. Box 13247, Capitol Station, Austin 78711.

A commission of 37 distinguished Texas citizens finished work on their draft of the new Constitution on November 1, and copies have been available in limited numbers since that time. Section 1, the Texas Bill of Rights, is untouched. However, some far-reaching changes are made in other sections.

The Governor is given power to reduce spending items in the Appropriations Bill. Now he can only veto them entirely, or let them stand.

The Legislature is required to meet once every two years, but the length and frequency of the sessions is left to legislative enactment, rather than spelled out in the Constitution.

Judges who hear cases on appeal above the District Court level would be appointed , rather than elected, from lists submitted by a Judicial Nominations Commission. Rather than stand election against opponents who file against them, such judges would have their names submitted to the voters with the question to be answered, "Should Judge ('Blank') be retained in office?" If a majority voting said "no" another person would be selected by the governor from a list of approved nominees.

There are only a few of approximately 25 major changes proposed.

On January 8, 1974, the members of the Texas Legislature will meet as a Constitutional Convention to review the work of the Commission, make changes, and submit to the people the final document agreed upon -- provided 2/3 of the 181 members vote in favor of submitting some final draft, or possibly alternative proposals, for a vote at a special election. Final approval requires a favorable vote from a majority of those Texas citizens who cast votes in the election, a procedure now followed for the adoption of amendments to the present Constitution.

Senator Patman said that he would be outling in greater detail more of the proposed changes in coming weeks and during the Convention.

Entomology Meet Set In Dallas

Some 1,800 entomologists whose task is to man-handle the nation's insect pest while keeping food supplies and man in reasonable harmony will converge on Dallas Nov. 26-30 for the annual Entomological Society of America meeting.

Theme of the conference headquartered at the Statler-Hilton Hotel will be "Entomology and The Americas."

The scientists will be looking at changing roles of chemicals and at major thrusts underway to develop other means of insect abatement.

Dr. Gordon E. Guyer, ESA president and University of Michigan entomologist, will address the gathering Monday at 9:20 a.m. on the subject "Pests, Pesticides and People."

During the week, over 500 scientific papers and symposium sessions will explore almost every aspect of insect life and its bearing on man, animals and the environment. A portion of the meeting will deal with entomology in South America.

TJC Regents Vote More Programs

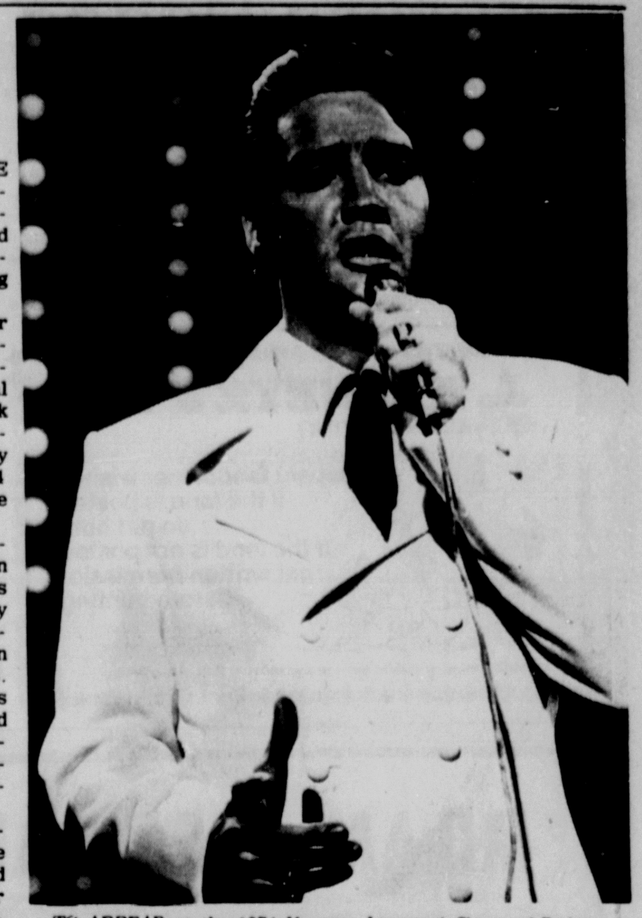
TEMPLE

The Temple Junior College Board of Regents Monday night (Nov. 19) moved to provide additional medical and manpower training programs at the college.

The regents voted to enter into a contract with the Genito a contract with the Central Texas Regional Medical Education Foundation to seek grant monies for new programs. The college will pay the foundation $5,000 in 1974 to provide services for the solicitation of funds.

The regents also consented for President Marvin Felder to begin discussions with McLennan Community College in Waco to establish a joint curriculum in the allied health sciences. Felder said the two colleges working together could avoid duplication and "could offer any allied health programs that the Central Texas area could use."

At the request of the Texas Education Agency, the college board also approved three additional Manpower Development Training Programs at TJC. The programs are cashier-checker, nurses aid, and licensed professional nursing.



TO APPEAR at the 1974 Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo, Elvis Presley, is scheduled to perform Sunday March 3 at matinee and evening performances. The show will run from Feb. 22 ghrough March 3. Other performers include Conway Twitty, Sonny and Cher, among others

Is Sun Ultimate Answer To World Energy Crisis?

Like a sunburned bathing beauty, scientists are squinting at the sky with new respect.

Many see the sun as the ultimate answer to the world's darkening energy crisis, the National Geographic Society says.

The heating oil shortage, rising gasoline prices, burning up natural gas reserves, hitting the bottom of the Nation's coal mines -- these problems or prospects are focusing more and more hope on solar energy.

In the United States, $12 million has been appropriated for studies by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Foundation. Many argue for larger crisis funding.

Up to now, making the sun do man's work in any big way has been the stuff of laboratory theories, of science fiction writers, and of pioneering ecologists, conservationists, and pollution fighters.

SUNNY BONANZA

There's plenty to work with: The total sun power shining on the ground in the contiguous 48 states alone is 600 times more energy than the Nation uses.

Or, on any one day, the average amount of solar radiation falling on Lake Erie is more than the total energy used throughout the United States.

However, over the next 30 years the country is expected to use more energy than it has since the Mayflower arrived.

At that rate, fossil fuels will be hard put to meet demands. According to a research geophysicist of the U. S. Geological Survey, the Nation's oil will be almost gone by the year 2,000, and the world's by 2030.

Natural gas in the United States should be at peak production in the next 10 years. Most of the world's minable coal may last for 300 years more.

By then, scientists hope to have the earth energized by something else -- like sun power. They have several ideas of how to bring the sun down to earth.

A huge satellite, put into orbit above the atmosphere 22,300 miles high and revolving always in a fixed position above the United States, would be exposed to sunlight almost 24 hours a day. Rays of the sun would be converted to electricity by millions of solar energy cells covering the satellite's absorbing panels, which might measure 25 square miles.

Changed to microwave energy, the electricity would be beamed to earth for final conversion into electric power circuits.

Another plan calls for miles of sun catchers on sun baked deserts of the southwest. Panels with specially coated glass pipes would trap the sun's heat like a greenhouse and the heat could then be used to drive electric generators.

Meanwhile, a few dozen houses in the United States -- now neighborhood novelties -- already are obtaining electricity from sunpower roof panels.

Growing Dagga Big In Africa

By William Humphries

JOHANNESBURG

Reuter -- Several times a year, women of the Transkei go out into the secret places of their hilly African homeland to carry on what a police chief calls one of the territorys "home industries" -- growing dagga (marijuana).

Equally regularly, helicopter-borne policemen swoop down into nearly inaccessible ravines and crevices to cut and burn much of the forbidden crop before it is harvested.

According to local experts at least 10 times as much marijuana is destroyed in South Africa every year as in the rest of the world put together.

In the year ending last June, police confiscated more than 4,410 million pounds of dagga, worth about 28 million dollars on the street.

No one knows how much undetected dagga -- which local researchers claim is 10 times stronger than the American variety--goes up in smoke every year.

The great majority of dagga smokers in the republic are among the non-whites who also comprise most of the population. Last year there were more than 10,000 convictions for use and possession of the drug by colored (mixed race) people and Africans.

South Africa's problem with "hard" drugs, such as heroin, is however still minor compared with some other western countries.

According to the divisional commissioner of police, Brigadier J. J. McLaren, the Transkei, one of the areas designated by the South African government as an "African Homeland" and set in rolling country on the east coast, is recognized as the area in the nation where "dagga growing is most rife."

An average "seek and destroy" operation there accounts for between 50 and 60 tons of young plants, known as wet dagga, a week.

But only an estimated 50 per cent of the crop is found and destroyed, the rest being smuggled to the cities. Very little is consumed in the growing areas.

Soviet Bloc Countries Eye Pipeline From Middle East

By S. B. Lazarevic

BELGRADE

Reuter -- While the western world grapples with threats to its oil supplies from the Arab oil producers, Soviet bloc countries are hurriedly and intensively discussing with Yugoslavia the construction of a pipeline to supply them with oil from the Middle East.

Although plans for a trunk pipeline from the Adriatic to the Danube basin go back many years, it was the keen interest showed by the Soviet Union and its allies that put the project into a higher tempo since the Yugoslavs agreed early last summer to go ahead with the scheme.

Recent visits by the president of the Comecons Bank from Moscow, the Hungarian finance minister and a session of the Yugoslav-Czechoslovak joint economic committee were mainly concerned with one question -- the Adriatic pipeline.

The pipeline was also a theme in the talks of five Soviet bloc leaders who visited Yugoslavia this year -- Polish party leader Edward Gierek, Romanian president Nicolaw Ceausescu, Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin, Hungarian party leader Janos Kadar and most recently his Czechoslovak counter part Gustav Husak.

The east European interest is easy to understand in the context of the areas continually growing need for oil, its lack of seaports and current transport difficulties.

Experts see the 420 mile pipeline as the speediest and most economic way to carry oil from the Middle East and North Africa.

The pipeline will run from the northern Adriatic port of Rijeka to industrial centres near Zagreb, then run eastward to Belgrade and have separate spurs to Hungary and Rumania.

Unlike western industrial countries now being penalized by the Arabs for their stand in the Middle East conflict, the east European states, as long-time Arab supporters, have reason to feel fairly confident of their future supplies.

Non-aligned Yugoslavia also nurtures close ties with the oil-producing states and recently announced that Libya and Algeria had promised to supply "as much as required."

It is a subject of speculation just how much of the cut that has been made in Arab oil supplies to the west and Japan could be absorbed by the east European states.

There is evidence they have big plans, which have the blessing of the Soviet Union.

Both Czechslovakia and Hungary have signed long-term agreements with Yugoslavia, and are now in the midst of extensive talks on their financial and technological contributions to the Adriatic pipeline project.

Hungary now receives six to seven million tons of oil through two pipelines from the Soviet Union, but plans to refine up to 10 million tons by the end of 1976 when the Adriatic pipeline reaches Budapest.

Poland, which signed a preliminary protocol on participating in the project, said its requirements could amount to between four and 11 million tons a year.

Romania as an oil producing country looks forward to being connected to a trunk pipeline for transport of its oil to central and eastern Europe.

Austria, although not so evidently as others, could also benefit from the project.

Auto Grants Down For Veterans

Auto grants and adaptive equipment expenditures on service disabled veterans totaled $6.8 million in fiscal year 1973 -- down from $10.5 million a year earlier, Jack Coker, VA Regional Office Director, reported today.

Coker said grants of up to $2,800 toward purchases of cars for 1,705 veterans and servicemen accounted for $4.6 million of fiscal year 1973 expenditures. The balance ($2.2 million) went for installation, maintenance and repair of special adaptive equipment, such as hand controls, to facilitate driving the cars.

In fiscal year 1972, costs of these benefits for 3,265 recipients came to $10.5 million. Benefits totaling $118.5 million have gone to 67,200 since the first $1,600 auto grant was authorized in 1946 under Public Law 79-663 for certain disabled World War II veterans.

Coker noted that through out the years several laws have expanded and improved the program. Public law 82-187 (1951), for example, extended eligibility to Korean Conflict veterans, and Public Law 90-77 (1967) further extended it to certain disabled veterans with service after January 31, 1955.

Lapplanders Seek Ancient Ways

By John Chadwick

OESTERSUND, Sweden

Reuter -- The Lapplanders, Europe's last surviving nomads, are fighting a rear-guard action to protect their ancient way of life against an invasion from the south.

After a legal battle lasting seven years, a court here has now agreed that the Lapps--20,000 of whom survive in Sweden -- were granted special hunting, fishing, mining and grazing rights in the 17th century.

The Lapplanders, fighting against economic and cultural inroads from the south of Sweden, are hoping to have these rights up-dated and guaranteed for the future.

The provincial court here ruled that the ancient land rights had now been abrogated by the crown -- but the Lapps refuse to accept this the final work and say they will take their case to the highest court in Sweden. They hope to win wider support by lobbying members of Parliament.

History has given some hard knocks to the Lapplanders. A stocky, industrious and picturesque people distinguished by their gaily embroidered red headbands and collars.

Centuries ago they were forced to pay tribute of hides and whalebone to the marauding Vikings.

Today the enemies are different -- the spread of roads through the mountains an invasion of tourists and hunters from the south and the diminishing profitability of their traditional means of livelihood, the reindeer.

The Lapps, whose origins are still shrouded in mystery, are struggling to maintain their identity in this highly-organized modern state.

Their legal marathon concerns their claim to reindeer grazing, hunting, mining, water and general access rights on the high fells They reject the definition of these rights as laid down in a 1971 law.

This law gives the state the right to close off certain areas to reindeer breeding if necessary for "the general welfare."

The Lapplanders claim to the northern territories is based on prescriptive rights. The Swedish geneticists Lars Beckman regards the Lapps as the oldest ethnic group in Scandinavia and the original natives of the area. Besides those in Sweden, a further 24,000 Lapps live in Norway, Finland and the Soviet Union.

They were long before the birth of Christ and some theorists even think they predated and survived an ice age by clinging to a narrow coastal strip when a huge ice-cap covered the Scandinavian peninsula.

Icelandic sagas of the 13th century describe how the Vikings battled with the Lapps and took silver from them.

In later centuries the Lapplanders found themselves paying taxes to many other masters. In the 18th century they actually paid taxes to two countries at once -- Sweden and Denmark, both of which claimed sovereignty over the northern region.

In the 16th century, the Swedish hero Gustav Vasa rejected the Lapp's claims to the northern wilds and encouraged settlement in the area. And during Queen Christian's reign a century later, the queen's men forced the Lapps to mine silver ore from the Mountains for them.

Today, the Swedish adamministration is naturally keen to dispel charges that, like the American Indians, the Lapps have become second-class citizens in their own country.

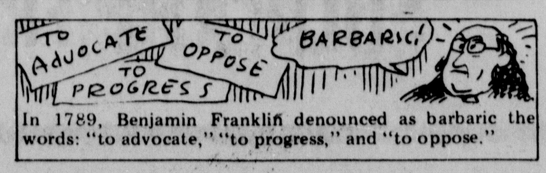
In the long run, time may solve the problem, for despite their intense dedication to their old culture and language -- Lappish contains precise and poetic descriptions of woods and water unrivalled in other languages--the simple facts of economic life appear likely to spell the end of the saga of the northern nomads.

Reindeer breeding--now pursued mainly to provide steaks in which Scandinavian restaurants specialize--now provides a living for no more than a quarter of Swedens' 10,000 Lapps.

The number of reindeer in Sweden is about a quarter of a million. To yield a gross income of $7,500 a year, a family needs about 500 reindeer. A large number of families own fewer than 200.

Many of the men have become farmers, railway workers or miners at Sweden's huge iron ore center in Kiruna.

It was not until 1904 that the first Lapp society was founded in Sweden. There is now an active National Council of Swedish Lapps, which is pursuing the long trail battle started in 1966.



In 1789, Benjamin Franklin denounced as barbaric the words: "to advocate," "to progress," and "to oppose."

Growing It Faster

One reason producers have been able to keep up with increasing consumer demand for beef is the phenomenal increase in the growth rate of animals due to genetic improvements and increased feeding efficiencies. This means a sharp reduction in the time required from range (ranch) to range (kitchen). It now takes less than 15 months from the time a calf is born until it grows into an 1,100 pound market-weight steer. Forty years ago the process took about three years.

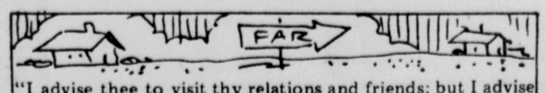
GOLF'S FINEST - Fairway Farm east of San Augustine has two 18 hole gold courses that Golf Digest lists among the 200 toughest courses in the country. Originally, a private club built by oilman J. C. Benedum, the 'golf farm' is now open to the public.



"I advise thee to visit thy relations and friends; but I advise thee not to live too near them." (Dr. Thomas Fuller)

Golf Destination Now Open To The Public

By Elmer Whiddon Jr.

"This south course is a par 71, and the course record for tournament play is par???!"

"Yes, that's right, they say that the fellow that built this course changed the holes to make it tougher every time someone parred a hole."

And "that fellow," the late J. C. Benedum, an oilman, did a lot of other things to suit himself. In 1947, taking 1,500 acres of East Texas piney woods dotted with eight lakes, he carved out and polished not one, but two of the finest 18-hole golf courses to be found anywhere. Golf Digest lists them among the 200 toughest courses in the country and they are among the 50 in Eastern Airlines' guide to great courses.

To the golfing complex Benedum added an antique furnished guest mansion with 32 bedrooms to go with his own 10 bedroom pad; a 110-foot lighted free formed swimming pool; hunting dog kennels; a skeet and trap range; facilities for raising quail, pheasant, chukar, partridge and mallard ducks; tennis courts; a 3,500-foot air strip; dining facilities and meeting rooms.

He called it Fairway Farm Hunt Club. And, until his death it was operated as a private club -- open only to an elite few individuals and company executives.

In 1972, after Benedum's death, Fairway Farm was purchased by Austin realtor Herman Neusch (pronounced Nash), and it is now open to the public. The place is rapidly gaining popularity as a site for company business sessions, but it is virtually undiscovered by the general public.

Located off State Highway 21 five miles east of San Augustine, Fairway Farms offers room (double occupancy) and three excellent meals for $29 per day per person. Daily green fees are $7.50 on weekends and $5 weekdays. In addition to golf, activities available include swimming, tennis, horseback riding, hunting, skeet and trap shooting, billiards, and fishing, either in the farm's lakes or on nearby Sam Rayburn and Toledo Bend reservoirs.

175 MPG AND NO HELMET NEEDED - This is the first certified "motor-assisted bicycle" in Texas under a new law effective August 27. With a top speed of 20 mph and a 49cc engine, the manufacturer claims 175-200 mpg. The Solex motor-assisted bicycle shown has a 0.7 hp engine. The Solex can be pedaled like any bicycle, or used with the motor only, or both. Motor-assisted bicycles are legal for street use without helmets.
